

Family Medicine Residency
Community Medicine Rotation
Bethany Lawrence, M.D.

Rotation Goal

Family physicians care not only for their individual patients but are also responsible for the health of their communities. They are often the leaders of Community Medicine. The Community Medicine experience of the Family Medicine residency addresses the impact of community factors on individual health and familiarizes residents with community health resources. Community factors begin with the individual's immediate environment like the home and extend to greater location like the town or even culture. Community health resources form a comprehensive group of services aimed at the prevention and treatment of illness in the entire community. During the community medicine rotation, residents should meet the following overall goals:

1. Understand non-medical factors that impact the care of individual patients.
 - a. Social Factors (e.g. Race, Ethnicity, Culture, Gender)
 - b. Economic Factors
 - c. Environmental Factors
2. Understand factors that impact the health of communities
 - a. Social Factors
 - i. Racial Disparities in health care
 - ii. Cultural Disparities in health care
 - b. Economic Factors
 - i. Economic Disparities in health care
 - c. Environmental Factors
3. Become familiar with resources that are already available to improve the health of a community.
4. Acquire the knowledge and tools necessary to develop resources that can be used to improve the health of a community.

Rotation Structure

The Community Medicine rotation is a 4 week rotation that will expose residents to a variety of topics and activities, including care for abused children, communicable disease management, public health statistics and services, environmental health, school health, disaster responsiveness, community-based health screening and promotion, occupational health, community health assessment, rural health care, home visits, and care for disabled persons. Residents will experience aspects of Community Medicine both during the rotation and longitudinally. The longitudinal experience will be geared towards the resident's personal interests by creating a unique project for them to complete. During this rotation, residents will spend two or three half-days per week in their continuity clinic. Residents will receive a detailed schedule containing information about their assignments for the month. At least one week prior to the rotation, the resident must review the details, especially since some preparation time is mandatory.

Understanding Community Health Issues – Residents will become aware of issues that impact the health of the community by working in a variety of settings. These settings are listed below.
